The publishers comments for your chapter Bridgette, looks like a little bit of work but not too much depending on how you want to respond?

Dear Shiloh

This piece certainly has a different approach – I like it.

However I think the power of its big claims are diminished by the lack of referencing and citations. It needs facts and stats—for example:

*In the first five years how many Maori health providers were established, and by whom? Iwi mostly?

*What are the stats for worsening Maori health indicators?

*What are some of the other indicators of success that Maori would prefer to use?

*What is the level of current governments investment across the health sector and what is the key metric to show that it is static or reducing?

*How many Maori health organsations have gone to the wall in this period?

*How many others limp on, reliant on other funding sources?

All best

Nicola
